WEATHER—Fair tonight, cooler in northwest portions, Friday fair; cooler in northern portions.

The next move will be to sew up the South Prospect street paving for Barber asphalt.

It will not be interesting to watch some republican editors do a double flip-flop to get onto the Taft band wagon.

The boys demonstrated yesterday, that they can win a close game, even though they did lose two on the home diamond.

President Roosevelt has determined upon a pardon for January. We are willing to forgive May, if we can have some nice weather from this time on.

This is the year for favorable mention for the presidential nomination. Judson Harmon, Judge Gray and T. P. Ryan have been mentioned, but there is only one medal man.

When some alleged republican leaders are "trun down" a few more to promote his own political future they will begin to wonder "Where are We At?"

THE EXPECTED, HAPPENS.

The first step in the move which has been expected has been made. The waters of the turbulent political pool in Ohio will be quieted, Taft will receive the support of the Buckeye delegation in the coming national convention, Foraker will turn his attention to succeeding himself in the senate and Harris will probably be the nominee for governor.

Ever since Foraker came to Ohio and began cracking his fists under Taft's nose, those who knew Foraker's methods have predicted that sooner or later he would endeavor to make a deal with the Taft forces which would insure their support for the senatorial fight in the next session of the legislature. Indeed some have gone so far as to say that Foraker has never had any serious intentions of putting up a finish fight for the presidency; that he intended to stir up just enough of a fight to get Taft under obligations to him for pulling out of the race so that he could not refuse to support him for the senatorship.

This move upon the part of the Foraker forces, headed by George B. Cox, and followed in quick succession by the other leaders, is merely the old old trick worked over again. It is indeed amusing to hear George B. Cox declaring for Taft. The corpulent secretary of war is the man who dealt the staggering blow to the Cincinnati boss, when he had Herick nominated to succeed himself. Taft intended it for a clean knock-out but the blow fell just a little short, as has been shown by developments since that eventful day in Akron. Now to see Cox coming out for Taft for president reminds us of the Devil attending prayer meeting.

Foraker evidently believes he has made himself solid for the senatorship. He figures that because he has been able to kick up a little dust in Ohio and then throw away his chances and declared for Taft, Taft will not dare to put up a fight against him. There is, however, another man who must be reckoned with. Congressman Theodore Burton, of Cleveland, is an avowed candidate for Foraker's shoes and the forces which have declared for Taft for president have also been declaring for Burton for senator, so that it is indeed doubtful whether Foraker's scheme will work again. Taft has no reason for showing Foraker any leniency. Foraker has not caused Taft any trouble so far and the indications are that he would not have caused any great amount of annoyance, had he continued his fight until the day of the convention. Taft has had the Ohio indorsement "cinched" since he first let it be known that he would accept, therefore he had no reason to compromise with Foraker, if he did compromise. Congressman Burton has been linking his fate with that of Secretary Taft. It has been Burton's popularity which has, in part at least, made Taft's sailing so easy and if Taft now sees fit to throw down the Cleveland man and swing his support to Foraker it will operate against him in the election.

The indications are that the Ohio leaders have ridden a good horse to death and that Foraker is now a candidate for membership in the "Down And Out Club."

What Others Say.

RESULTS OF THE "HIGHER LAW."

The "higher law" is an alleged summary method of protecting the family and the home from social scandal. It was brought into public notice in the Thaw trial and many people advocated its adoption generally as a purifier of society. Most people have an opinion as to what the introduction of the "higher law" did for Evelyn Thaw.

Since the Thaw trial we have had at least a dozen applications of the "higher law" in social matters. The case of Judge Loving of Virginia, furnishes a very good illustration of its working.

Judge Loving heard that a young man had mistreated and ruined his daughter. He at once loaded his shotgun, hunted up the young man accused and slew him. It now turns out that it was a false alarm. The young man was out riding with the young woman and they had a drink together. That was all. It was wrong—at least it was indiscreet—but who was to blame? The young man didn't compel the girl to take the drink. The public will have its own opinion about the affair and the young woman must share the blame with the young man.

The father of the murdered young man will prosecute the case to the bitter end, for he, too, belongs to the P. F. V.'s. Judge Loving must answer to a charge of murder. In order to make defense, he must try to prove to the world that his daughter was ruined, a charge which the facts, as they come to light, don't sustain and from which the young woman shrinks. But she must go on the stand and testify.

Just consider the predicament in which the rash act of her father has placed this young woman. In order to save her father she must testify to her own degradation. In order to defend and probably do justice to her dead lover and herself, she must help hang her father or send him to prison for life.

A jury will place its own estimate on the value of the testimony of a witness under such trying circumstances. So will the public. Whatever may be the facts, the prospects and hopes and happiness of the young woman are ruined. So is the life of Judge Loving. The life of a young man has been sacrificed, another home is plunged into misery, and we are told that this is necessary for the protection of the home under the higher law, invoked by a shrewd lawyer to save a murderer, defeat justice and make a fat fee for himself.

But let us see how this so-called "higher law" will work out. It will not always end with the first killing. If a husband or father is unjustly slain under the hasty application of this new anarchy, has some member of the family a right to redress? Then there is a second tragedy—perhaps a double tragedy. Will it stop there? No. It is not resort to this sort of sanguinary vengeance that started some of the family feuds which have continued for generations and sacrificed scores on scores of lives?

What is that boon of liberty for which the world struggled and bled down through the ages? What right did the English yeomanry wrest from the hands of that cruel tyrant, King John, on the Runnymede meadows nearly 700 years ago? The magna charta—the right of a fair trial for every one and any one accused. This guaranty of liberty prohibited either king or inquisition taking life without due process of law. The magna charta and the writ of habeas corpus are the boast of our modern civilization

This step in human rights put a quietus on the so-called "higher law," so popular now in the estimation of ignorance and delusion. But this higher law smuggled east from the Pacific coast, as an exigency of commercialized justice will soon repeal itself, even in the minds of the social molluscoids, who have been elevating it as an anarchical fetish.—Toledo Press.

CITIES THAT WOULD COVER A STATE.

In the cities of the United States which have from 8,000 population upwards there is an area about midway between that of Connecticut and that of New Jersey. It is 20 per cent greater than the former State, roughly speaking and 20 per cent smaller than the latter.

The area covered by cities of above 8,000 population would make a solid block of territory 100 miles long and nearly 63 miles wide. It would extend from Cleveland to Toledo and more than half way to Columbus from the shore of the lake.

It is true that not all of this area is occupied by city buildings. Much of it is vacant. Parks take up a good deal of ground and unoccupied lots as much more in the average large city. But on the other hand there are hundreds of thriving little cities which have less than 8,000 inhabitants or were below that limit at the time of the latest census. They would suffice to offset the empty spaces in the cities which exceed the 8,000 mark.

It may be said without exaggeration, therefore, that if every acre of the State of Connecticut were covered by the buildings of American cities there would not be room enough to accommodate them all, allowing, of course, for the necessary streets, doorways, alleys, locks, etc. It is often said that the cities are swallowing up the country in a figurative sense, because of their rapid growth, enormous wealth and productive power and great influence upon American progress and development. They are evidently eating up a surprising piece of the country, in the narrow sense of actual occupation.—Cleveland Leader.

FORAKER QUITS FIGHT.

Cox says he takes this stand in the interest of party harmony. In reality he sees that the Taft sentiment, not only in the state at large but in Hamilton county, is too strong to oppose. He is trying to strengthen his municipal machine by carrying the city and the county at the next election by the use of Taft's name, while at the same time he seeks to serve Foraker in the latter's ambition to succeed himself in the senate.

Foraker, as has been known for some time, is ready formally to drop his presidential campaign. In a statement given out last night the senator declares that if Cox's scheme meets with public approval he'll be for Taft. So far as can be learned influential Taft men here are not ready to favor anything that looks like a compromise with Foraker.

Cox began his statement with a reference to recent reports that he has been engaged in negotiations looking toward an agreement between the Taft and Foraker forces. He said there is nothing to that story.

"As far as I am concerned," he said, "there is absolutely nothing to this talk. I know of no such deal and would not take part in such negotiations. I have retired from active participation in politics. Of course I cannot absolutely refuse to advise with friends."

As to the Ohio situation he said: "I'll give you my views, my personal views, as an individual and a private citizen, and then I want to be let alone. In my judgment the time has come for the good of the Republican party that something should be done. We are on the eve of next fall's election. Nothing should be done to endanger party success. If you will recall, two years ago we had factional differences in the party and our ticket went down in defeat.

"This, I hope, will not occur again. Our differences should be settled within the party and we should go forward as one man, which will mean victory all along the line. Ohio has a great future. We have had great men in the past, and have great men now. We should take care of them. The nomination of good clean men for the municipal offices means their election, and party success next fall will be the foundation for next year's work. I would advise all my Republican friends in Ohio to take these matters into their own hands and adjust them without interference by individuals or factions. It is my best judgment that this would bring harmony and victory both.

"We must not forget that we must carry the legislature next year to elect a United States senator and get much needed legislation, and must elect a governor and other state officers. The way to do all this, I believe, is for all Republicans to put their shoulders to the wheel in their several neighborhoods and see to it that none but true Republicans represent them. Our watchword should be 'Success for the Republican party' and to achieve this we should support Hon. W. H. Taft for president, Hon. J. B. Foraker for United States senator and Hon. A. L. Harris for governor."

"What about your personal differences with Secretary Taft?"

"I know of no personal differences. There may have been some political difference, but they are things of the past and will not be permitted to stand in the way of party success. I would repeat Republicans, let your watchword be harmony and party success. My friends, I trust, will be for Taft for president, Foraker for senator and Harris for governor."

When the attention of Senator Foraker was called to the statement he said:

"I have just read what Mr. Cox says. If I understand him correctly he makes a specific recommendation, addressed to the Republicans of Ohio, as to what their action shall be in the convention of next year. I am not sure it calls for any response from me, but inasmuch as you seem to think it does, I will repeat that I do not want any political honors at the hands of the Republicans of Ohio except with their hearty endorsement. Therefore if what Mr. Cox suggests and recommends should meet with their approval no one will support Secretary Taft more cordially than I shall."

Charles P. Taft, editor of the Cincinnati Times-Star and brother of Secretary Taft, when shown the interview with Cox, said:

"Mr. Cox takes a broad view of the matter. He sees the opportunity to elect another Ohio president and very wisely urges that we get together."

ROOSEVELT WANTS FORAKER KNOCKED OUT.

Washington, May 9.—The open declaration of George B. Cox for the endorsement of Secretary Taft for the presidency is regarded here as a final knockout blow to the presidential aspirations of Foraker and the signal for a scramble to get onto the bandwagon, Cox's pronouncement, so far as it relates to Taft, was received with delight at the White House. But that it was accompanied by the endorsement of Foraker for another term in the senate, added some bitterness to the sweet. The president wants to have Foraker eliminated entirely from National politics and especially to have him retired from the senate and war on him will be continued.

It is denied here that a compromise agreement entered into between the Taft and Foraker forces. If Foraker wins another term in the senate he will have to do it with his own resources. Secretary Taft declined to make comment on Cox's statement.

HAYWOOD TRIAL

Of Haywood's private life is his love for wife and home. Through years when she lay a victim of paralysis, completely helpless, her brawny miner husband carried her up and down the mountain sides after his work was done, that she might get fresh air and possibly recover. Husband and nurse he was to her, and his care in a measure restored her health.

Regardless of charges against him, heedless of the anathemas of millionaires and statesmen of high degree, despite the characterization by President Roosevelt of Wm. Haywood as "an undesirable citizen," Mrs. Haywood is certain of the man's innocence, nobleness and ultimate release. The wives of Moyer and Pettibone are in Idaho, permitted to visit their husbands and cheer their days in prison.

Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone are well supplied with attorneys. Money for every purpose has been supplied to them by labor organizations throughout the country. An appropriation of $50,000 by the state legislature and the regular revenues at the disposal of the prosecuting officers have been met by contributions from every source. The general opinion among labor men is that Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone are victims of persecution. There have been scores of murders, dozens of dynamite outrages occurring in the Rocky Mountains coincidental with labor troubles.

the Western Federation of Miners accuse each other of instigating them, the former to create favorable sentiment, the latter to do by force what they had not the power to do by other means.

Some one placed the dynamite that killed 13 miners at Independence, Col., on the backbone of the continent. Some one killed Frank Steunenberg, governor of Idaho, during the Couer d'Alene troubles. All the other long list of crimes were not upheavals of nature. The state of Idaho believes it will prove that the present defendants were responsible for at least one murder.

KILLING OF STEUNENBERG.

Steunenberg was blown up by dynamite as he entered the gate to his home at Caldwell, Idaho, Dec. 30, 1905. His body was blown 20 feet, a portion of the fence was wrecked and his house damaged. Gov. Gooding at once charged the crime to officials of the Western Federation of Miners. In the February following Harry Orchard, in the Idaho penitentiary, made a long confession, so it is charged, to Detective Jas. McPartland, of Denver. As a result of this confession and upon other evidence, steps were taken to remove Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone into the jurisdiction of Idaho from Colorado.

Warrants were sworn out by Gov. Gooding formally charging Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone with the murder of Steunenberg. The governor of Colorado secretly honored the extradition papers, the men were secretly arrested and in the darkness of early morning were placed aboard a special train, heavily guarded, and carried to Idaho. To prevent interferences along the route, changes of engines were made at remote sidings instead of at stations.

A protest against this proceeding, made by the prisoners, was carried to the United States supreme court, which decided against them and cleared the way for the state to proceed with the trial. Gov. Gooding has personal charge of the prosecution but J. H. Hawley is field marshal for the state. His leading associate is United States Senator Borah, one of the greatest criminal lawyers in the west. Borah's friends charge that it is because of his association with the prosecution of this case that charges against him in connection with the land investigations have been made.

FOR THE DEFENSE.

Atty. J. J. H. Nugent has charge of the active preparation of the case for the defense. He established offices here soon after the arrest of the prisoners and has practically lived here continuously. Clarence Darrow, of Chicago, a leading lawyer of radical opinions, identified with ex-Mayor Dunne's advocacy of municipal ownership, is one of the most prominent among the counsel for the defense.

Frank Steunenberg was governor of Idaho during the Couer d'Alene labor troubles. He made the application that brought United States troops into the district to restore order. Several years elapsed after he left the executive chair before he was killed. The miners say he had passed from their minds and that they harbored no feelings of revenge.

The long delay in getting the case to final adjudication has been favorable to the defense in that they have secured as a witness Steve Adams, chief of those intended by the state to corroborate Orchard's alleged confession. Adams recanted his alleged confession, was immediately rearrested upon the charge of killing Fred Tyler, a sheepman in the mountains, and given a speedy trial. While these facts may be introduced by the state discrediting his testimony, he is lost forever as a witness to support the prosecution.

The prosecution claims to have found in Orchard's trunk instructions in cipher from Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone.
